

MSc Systemic Leadership and Organisational Development

Start: February 2014
Location: University of Bedfordshire, Luton | Central London Location
Duration: 2 years taught + 1 research dissertation year
Mode: Part-time day, blocked delivery, 2 consecutive days a month
Open to: UK / EU Students

Course Summary

This course is designed for professionals, leaders and consultants who aspire to a step-change in their leadership or consulting practice, creating opportunities for self and others, facilitating wisdom and development in organisations, groups and communities.

Systemic leadership and consulting practices are responsive to organisational challenges and opportunities for personal, relational and organisational development. Participants develop ethical, relational and reflexive skills and insights in systemic organisational practice and theory.

With human interaction at its heart this course is particularly suitable for professionals who aspire to achieve with, through and for others - corporate and business leaders, leaders in health or care settings, social and community workers, religious leaders, human resource professionals, change agents, internal and external consultants and many others.

Key features

- Work-related learning: practice development through work related assignments
- Co-creative learning as community of practice leveraging group diversity.
- Learning development facilitated by inter-active blocked seminars and through cutting edge e-learning infrastructure

Areas of study include

- Organisational meaning making
- Systemic coaching theory and practice
- Reflexive interventions in complex systems
- Dialogic approaches to organisational development
- Research as ethical intervention

Please contact us for details:

Dr. Christine Oliver
christine.oliver@beds.ac.uk
+44 7803 987940

UK/EU Fees

Total course cost* £ 4,500 (180 credits)
Typical annual fee £ 1,500 (60 credits)
* fees valid for Feb 2014 start,
annual fee pro rata to credits taken

Career opportunities

- The course develops you as a relational leader within a systemic and social constructionist framework of practice. It will equip you to facilitate and co-create meaning making in your organisation but also to critically reflect on current organisational practice and promote ethical practice.
- You will develop leadership skills such as team development, appraisal, coaching, the facilitation of meetings, conflict management.
- You will become an agent for change, development and organisational learning who contributes to your organisation or your clients' organisation from different systemic consultation and coaching positions,
- You will form an identity as systemic organisational research practitioner with your own research experience and contribution to ethical organisational practice development.
- Some graduates decide to expand and deepen their systemic insight and practice through a Professional Doctorate in Systemic Practice.

The course is profoundly open for participants to shape their learning experience to meet their needs and fit the requirement of their work place organisation.

The course is committed to be transformational to participants and to contribute to the organisations that support them.

Martin Miksits
martin.miksits@beds.ac.uk
+43 660 4444009